Description

Description

A stunning small growing Aloe with the most beautiful spikes of bright red flowers in late winter. This Aloe flowers at a young age and multiplies to form an attractive clump. Totally drought proof this plant makes a stunning display when planted 'en masse' or in drifts.

The 'Spider Aloe' looks dangerous but like many Aloes it is soft to the touch. This plant like it's more well known cousin Aloe vera, also has medicinal properties. Aloes are succulent plants, also known as fat-plants.

It is not difficult to grow them as a house plant or as a pot plant in the garden or greenhouse. Poisonous if eaten

Aloe Hybrid: Orange flare (Aloe Spinosissima)
